1. Famous Englishmen took part in the opening ceremony
 2. The UK presented itself
 3. London made a perfect setting for the Olympics
 4. The Olympic Games were watched by a billion of people all over the world
 5. The Queen’s acting debut
 6. How the Games inspired young athletes
 7. The film director who made the show
 8. A former royal home welcomed cyclists
- A. The opening ceremony had to speak for the country. Britain introduced its parts: England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland and celebrated the most prominent parts of their history, traditions and even climate. The famous London fog and rain were not forgotten either. The second part was devoted to the great Industrial Revolution, the era when Britain became the most powerful empire in the world. The third part addressed modern achievements including the National Health Service which is free for everybody in the UK.
- B. Self depreciating humour is one of the most prominent British traditions, and even the Queen is not above it. The audience was delighted to see the acting debut that Queen Elizabeth had prepared for the opening ceremony. The famous character James Bond, played by actor Daniel Craig, entered Buckingham Palace to speak with the Queen. After a short conversation the Queen and her super agent followed by the Queen’s dogs rushed into a helicopter to make a spectacular parachute jump and turn up at the ceremony just in time. The two parachutists who actually made the jump were Gary Connery (the Queen) and Mark Sutton (Bond). In fact, they didn’t get to the stadium and landed somewhere near Stratford Station.
- C. The Olympic flag was carried into the stadium and the promise to perform fairly and not to use drugs was made by all athletes. One of the last two Olympic torch bearers, English football superstar David Beckham, turned up on the River Thames on board a speed boat and passed it over to Sir Steve Redgrave who won five gold medals at five consecutive Olympics. Sir Steven Redgrave was the sportsman who carried the Olympic torch into the stadium after it had travelled 20,600 kilometres around the world. At this moving moment, another world-famous Englishman took the stage. It was the former leader of “the Beatles” Sir Paul McCartney who performed a song which the whole world could sing along to “Hey, Jude”.

- 17 The narrator's friends didn't want to make her upset when they laughed about her holidays.
- 1) True 2) False 3) Not stated
